An article in the Cue section Sunday about African-American performing arts groups misstated the price of tickets for seniors for the Dark Pearl Rising show at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 8 at Milwaukee High School of the Arts. Admission for seniors is $10, not free.

The Web address for TV critic Joanne Weintraub's online chat is www.jsonline.com/chat. An item in her column in today's Cue section incorrectly lists the Web address. The section was printed in advance.

An article Saturday on the state transportation budget included an error on a proposal by Rep. Jeff Stone (R-Greendale) to shift sales tax dollars from auto sales and services from the general fund to the transportation fund. The shift would occur over 10 years, starting with $50 million the first year.

An article Jan. 13 about the problem of calling Western cities the nation's least segregated incorrectly stated that John Logan, a professor at the State University of New York at Albany, drops metro areas with fewer than 50,000 African-Americans from his segregation index. Logan actually drops metro areas with fewer than 147,000 African-Americans from his ranking of the Top 50 Metro Areas. He also offers a complete index of all 331 metro areas but warns that results for any metro area with fewer than 50,000 African-Americans should be interpreted with caution. Logan said he does not recommend reliance on any single measure of segregation but believes the exposure index found on his Web site, www.albany.edu/mumford/census, is a better measure of integration than the approach used in a recent study by the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

The caption for a photo in the Business section Thursday that accompanied an article about an effort to prepare workers for the region's employment demands incorrectly stated where the picture was taken. It was at the Workforce Training Center, not the Center for Workforce Development at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

An Associated Press article in the Cue section Wednesday about the
