

6TH ANNUAL LEWIS MUMFORD LECTURE

Co-Sponsored by
The Center for Social & Demographic Analysis

"The Disorder of Cities: Social Meanings and Mechanisms of Durable Inequality"

By

Robert Sampson, Ph.D.
Department of Sociology
Harvard University

Friday, May 6, 2005 at 3:30 pm
Humanities 354
University at Albany

Robert J. Sampson is Henry Ford II Professor of the Social Sciences at Harvard University. His interests include crime, deviance, and stigmatization; as well as the life course; neighborhood effects; and the sociology of the modern city. He directed the Project on Human Development in Chicago Neighborhoods and his current work is examining the comparative network structure of community influence and collective civic engagement.

(Reception Immediately Following)